Indian Resources Development Program
INTRODUCTION
At first, financing the rising costs of a college education seems a daunting task, but funds are available. It’s just a matter of finding them. This guide to financial resources will help you do just that. For example, you can earn as you learn, working part-time jobs in the summer, or at a work-study or co-op assignments. You can also borrow money through financial institutions, or through the college you attend. Another option is for you to apply for a grant or a scholarship. Also, another valuable resource is family resources.

In addition to Financial Aid (from federal, state, and school specific) available to college students, there are sources specifically for Native American students, who classify as minorities. Some valuable resources include the Bureau of Indian Affairs Higher Education Grants, Tribal scholarships, and other corporate funds designated specifically for minority and/or Native American students.

This booklet prepared by the New Mexico State University Indian Resources Development Program lists sources of financial aid for Native American college students and potential college students. It does not list every source, but it can be a beginning point in your search for funds with which to finance your education. Eligibility, requirements, and deadline vary for every scholarship listed. We strongly urge you to contact potential sources for further information and requirements, as this is only an informative guide.

COLLEGE-BASED FUNDING
Financial aid is available through the college you attend. Ask the college you choose to send you any available financial aid information. Most colleges publish a guide to scholarships and specific types of approved aid sources and local scholarships.

STATE OF NEW MEXICO PROGRAM
State incentive grants and loans. See details on starting on page 17 of this booklet.

FEDERAL AID PROGRAMS
The five federal aid programs include Federal Pell Grants, Federal Supplemental Education Opportunity Grants, Federal Work-Study, Federal Perkins Loans, and Federal Stafford Loans. Eligibility requirements for each of those are listed in this booklet, but again, contact your preferred school for any specific requirements and forms.

AMERICAN INDIAN FINANCIAL AID SOURCES
There are several sources of financial aid for minority students. Native Americans may apply as minority students to these financial aid sources. You will be considered among other minority students. The most common financial aid offered specifically to Native American students is from the BIA through tribal agencies and local area offices. In addition to these federal funds, some specific tribes offer grants or scholarships from their funds for students who are registered members of said tribe. Eligibility requirements are tribal specific, though we do list several tribes and contacts with their relevant application procedures.
